Program content forecasted trends for the global economy, with a keynote by KBC Bank Ireland’s Chief Economist Austin Hughes, who spoke on international policy and his predictions for its success. Other topics included the status of the implementation of International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS), management trends in the 21st century, and transnational business opportunities, including the best strategies for doing business in Ireland. Speakers also addressed risks and weaknesses for profitable tax practices in light of increasing consumer online options.

Bill Dermody, DMLO Director, said, “We are more aware that global economic and political trends significantly impact the profits of our clients, be they large or small. The information and insights provided by BKR International, as well as the networking opportunities with firms around the globe, keep us connected to those realities in order to proactively help our clients be successful.”

The conference’s theme was forward-thinking in content and context, enabling BKR members to return home better informed about the important trends and developments in the accounting profession all around the world. Chief Economist Hughes referenced the “post-crisis economy” with predictions on growth and opportunity. Ms. Ana Gyorkos, editor of the London-based International Accounting Bulletin, focused on data measures and trends for professional services overall. In particular, she shared insights from a recent visit to China where she was invited to speak at the China International Fair for Trade in Services and meet with officers of the Chinese Institute of CPAs.
